

Max Kelly

Max is a litigation associate. His practice includes class actions, mass torts, and whistleblower matters. Max has been centrally involved in the In re 3M litigation since its inception, and has been on multiple trial teams that have recovered seven-figure verdicts for injured servicemembers in that MDL, one of the largest mass torts in history. Prior to joining Seeger Weiss, Max was an associate at Milbank Tweed in New York, primarily representing defendants in the financial services industry in the context of complex commercial disputes, government investigations, and class actions.

During his time as a law student, Max was a research assistant to Professor Arthur R. Miller, providing revisions and updates to Federal Practice and Procedure, one of the most frequently cited treatises in federal court practice in the United States.
